Following a rock star run at FringeNYC, these two ladies bring pandemonium and a tornado of unstoppable energy to Shakespeare's The Comedy of Errors. It's wacky. It's wild. It's somewhat understandable. It's old school Billy Shakespeare and two fast-talking women stirring up trouble on the stage. Clothes are tossed, hearts are broken, twins are lost. Don't miss out this summer at the PIT Loft.

About the Artists

CurtainUP may call Olivia Atwood and Maggie Seymour “terrific clowns,” but not long ago, they were just two college students in an empty room with an idea. They are now two artists with a show, the energy of a small country, and “standout comedic timing” according to Time Out New York. As performers they have trained with Second City in Chicago, The Baltimore Improv Group, The British-American Drama Society, and The National Theater Institute in CT. They have also worked with the Providence Improv Guild and Trinity Repertory Company. As Shakespeare basically said about them, “Though they be but little, these chicks are fierce.”
