A note from Schaeffer...

“It is my hope that these kinds of totalitarian measures that are designed to demoralize and humiliate the population will, in the end, have the opposite effect; that they will in fact stir people’s conscience at a deep level, and that they would, in the great tradition of human valor and resilience, become the bearers of the sacred seeds of liberty; Pilgrims and Frontiersmen destined to re-explore and cultivate the territory that once belonged to our forefathers, a territory of intellectual freedom and self-ownership, territory that has been all but forgotten for generations. The 2nd Amendment is at the heart of this struggle. It is the most hated by the oppressor and the most beloved by a free people. This is not because it merely enabled Americans to possess small arms. No it is loved and hated because it embodies the dignified autonomy found in one capable of mounting his own defense, beholden to no other for his safety.

“Our self-ownership, self-determination, and self-esteem rest on three essential legs. We must be able to: think for our self, provide for ourselves, and defend ourselves. The moment we make others responsible for any one of those, we become something less than human, a beast of burden whose proper nature lies dormant.

“The winds of change are whispering softly in the ears of those who listen, inviting them to awaken from their long sleep and return to their rightful place. This is but one question of consequence for us to ask ourselves: Who am I?”

Peace, Love and Liberty,

~F.A. Schaeffer Cox
