Our Core Principles

- All political authority comes from the people of Barbados through the conduct of elections and through the participation of people in activities geared towards participating fully in their democracy.

- The people of Barbados through all institutions both private and public shall recognise and encourage the freedom of the individual to be creative and innovative with the power to utilise their talents to the fullest extent possible for the benefit of Barbados and their fellow human beings.

- The people of Barbados shall enjoy health, knowledge, wealth and environmental sustainability.

- All of the resources and assets of Barbados belong to the people of Barbados and shall be managed and dispersed to the benefit of all Barbadians including future generations.

- Recognising Barbados’ smallness in size Barbados shall leverage its smallness to achieve quick and lasting positive results in all areas of endeavour while at the same time seeking to ensure that global initiatives do not compromise its continuous improvement.

- As the world becomes more reliant on technology, businesses become more competitive and regulatory obligations become more onerous Barbados must be leaders in technology application to improve efficiencies in every sector.

- All people shall have equal access to all social, economic, cultural, political and legal resources regardless of social position in order to participate fully in their country.

- All people are entitled to respect, dignity and the opportunity to work and to own businesses.

- All fundamental rights and freedoms guaranteed under the Constitution are applicable to all people regardless of race, colour, religion, gender, marital status, age, political affiliation or disability.

- Barbados has an important role to play within the international family of nations and shall seek to share its talents and resources to contribute to the advancement of the world community.
